Study at Cornell University (master's course) in the US from 2020 with the Keio CEMS MIM program

Keio University is the only university in Japan to participate in the CEMS MIM (CEMS Master's in International Management) program, a renowned leading international management program.

This program is a master's course in international management (double degree program) offered by "CEMS - the Global Alliance in Management Education," consisting of the world's top universities and business schools, global companies, and NGOs. Participation in CEMS is limited to one school per country, with Keio University representing Japan.

The Samuel Curtis Johnson Graduate School of Management at Cornell University, a prestigious US Ivy League university, recently became a CEMS member. Cornell University is the first US member university. With this, students who participate in the Keio University CEMS MIM program will be able to select Cornell University as a study abroad destination from August 2020 onward. In addition, students at Cornell University will be hosted at Keio University.

1. About the CEMS MIM program at Keio University

This is a master's double degree program offered by CEMS. Keio University is the exclusive Japanese member university of the program.

At Keio University, students at the Graduate School of Economics, Graduate School of Business and Commerce, and Graduate School of Media Design can participate in the CEMS MIM program.

In addition to classes at the host universities (selected from CEMS member universities), it offers a practical curriculum that includes business projects with CEMS corporate partners and internships of at least 8 weeks at global companies. Students who participate in this program and satisfy the completion requirements can acquire both a Keio University master's degree and CEMS master's degree.
