Introduction

In September 2003, the Graduate School of Science and Technology launched the all-English International Graduate Program on Advanced Science and Technology, making it possible for non-Japanese-speaking students to earn degrees. International Graduate Program courses are also open to Japanese students. Keio welcomes approximately 300 international students to its vibrant, multicultural campus every year.

Admissions Policy

The Graduate School of Science and Technology welcomes applications from individuals with the ability to think and act independently and who seek to become creative scientists and engineers capable of playing leading roles in a range of fields on the global stage in the borderless world of the 21st century.

Applicants should have a particular interest in science and technology subjects that form the foundations of manufacturing (such as mathematics, physics, and chemistry). They should possess basic academic competence in these subjects and be interested in acquiring the communication skills needed to be successful in the international arena. We invite applications from:

- 1) Individuals with a strong interest in science and technology
- 2) Individuals who are critical thinkers, interested in discovering intriguing phenomena and solving problems
- 3) Individuals interested in new concepts who embrace the challenge of generating innovation

Building on the foundations gained in their undergraduate studies, our students learn to solve problems independently within a flexible environment that offers transdisciplinary education across specialized fields. In this graduate program, we have created a framework to encourage students to learn autonomously and utilize their own capabilities to open future paths and possibilities.

Curriculum

The Graduate School of Science and Technology offers a two-year master's program followed by a three-year doctoral program. The master's program aims to equip students with a high-level mastery of science and technology fundamentals through a combination of coursework and faculty-guided independent research. The doctoral program requires students to design and execute unique academic research. Students are encouraged to pursue interdisciplinary research projects to open themselves up to different viewpoints while developing strong communication and leadership skills.

The Graduate School of Science and Technology consists of four schools, each with two to three curricula.

1) School of Mathematical and Physical Sciences

- Curriculum of Mathematics and Mathematical Sciences
- Curriculum of Physics
- Curriculum of Applied Physics and Physico-Informatics

2) School of Chemistry, Life Science, and Informatics

- Curriculum of Molecular Chemistry and Chemical Biology
- Curriculum of Emerging Physico-Chemistry
- Curriculum of Biosciences and Informatics

3) School of Engineering and Design

- Curriculum of Mechanical Engineering
- Curriculum of Electronics and Electrical Engineering
- Curriculum of System Design Engineering

4) School of Informatics, Management, and Human Sciences

- Curriculum of Open Sciences
- Curriculum of Industrial and Systems Engineering

Students are enrolled in one of the schools listed above and conduct research under the guidance of an academic advisor affiliated with their chosen curriculum. Although academic advisors are members of a specific curriculum, students themselves do not belong to a single curriculum in order to develop a broad perspective unrestricted by the framework of their academic advisor's field.

In this course, students receive guidance and engage in discussions with their academic advisor to prepare for their doctoral dissertation. Separately, successful applicants must submit a research proposal approved by their advisor to the relevant office prior to enrollment. If necessary, students may also take courses offered in the master’s program or other graduate schools upon discussion with their academic advisor.

Publication of Research Findings

Students in the doctoral program are required to publish their research results. Students are recommended to submit papers to academic journals and actively present their research results at academic conferences both in Japan and abroad. Publication of these results is a requirement for earning a doctoral degree (to submit a doctoral dissertation). Requirements differ for each school and curriculum.

The Doctoral Degree Evaluation Process

Successful completion of the doctoral program is evaluated as follows. The evaluation process and criteria may vary depending on the school.

- 1) An Evaluation Committee will be composed of faculty members from the doctoral candidate’s affiliated school. The Committee may include external members from outside the school or university when appropriate.
- 2) In addition to a comprehensive Committee review of the doctoral dissertation, the candidate must deliver a public presentation on their research.
- 3) The candidate will undergo a closed-door examination by the Committee on the basic knowledge related to the candidate’s field of research and English language skills.
- 4) The final evaluation and formal recommendation for degree conferral will be determined by the faculty members from the doctoral candidate’s affiliated school.
